CELEBRATING BLACK FUTURE - ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT FOR THE NEW MILLENNIUM

Three Alabama entrepreneurs will tell their individual success stories on Monday, February 1, as part of Shelton State Community College's Black History Month celebration. The forum, which is planned as one of Shelton's Millennium Evenings, is entitled "Celebrating Black Future - Economic Empowerment for the New Millennium."

The forum will be held at 7 p.m. in the Alabama Power Recital Hall. A reception will follow the program in the National Bank of Commerce Art Gallery.

Speakers for the evening are Mrs. Martha Hawkins, owner of Martha's Place in Montgomery, Al.; Tim Lewis, President of T. A. Lewis and Associates of Tuscaloosa and Birmingham; Dinah Walton, owner of two Buffalo Phil's Restaurant franchises in Tuscaloosa; and Alabama State Senator Charles Steele. Moderator for the evening is Louise Lewis, assistant director, C.A. Fredd Campus at Shelton State.

For Martha Hawkins, the idea of owning her own restaurant had been her dream since she was 12 years old. As a child, she would watch her own mother prepare home cooked meals. Her dream included having the restaurant in a large old house with a homelike atmosphere.

Hawkins married as a teenager and later had four sons to support. Working as a domestic to support herself and her sons, she met attorney Calvin Pryone of Montgomery who offered her a house, rent free, until she got on her feet. The amazing thing, according to Hawkins, is that the house he offered was just like the house she had dreamed about as a child.

However, when she went to the banks and financial institutions, she was turned down for a loan because of her lack of business experience and collateral. Finally, she received a $2,500 loan from the Black Women's Leadership and Economic Development project, a community group who had heard of Martha's struggle for financial support for her business. Martha's Place opened in 1988. With the success of the restaurant, Hawkins was able to get off public assistance and move out of public housing.

Today her children are grown and successful. Ms. Hawkins' story is one of perseverance, faith, and courage.

Dinah Walton is a native of Greene County, graduating from Eutaw High School in 1973. For almost 20 years, she worked for the University of Alabama. However, her dream was always to own her own business. She looked at the hot wings industry and saw that there seemed to be a lot of interest in this type of food in Tuscaloosa.

After reading a number of articles on entrepreneurship, she went to Phillip Weaver, the owner of Buffalo Phil's. Walton trained under Weaver at his local store for six months. Finally, on February 10, 1995, she opened her first Buffalo Phil's Wings on Skyland Boulevard. In 1997, she opened her second restaurant south of town off Highway 69.

Her hard work and determination paid off with the success of these restaurants. Mrs. Walton has two daughters and two small grandchildren.

Tim Lewis is president of T. A. Lewis and Associates. Lewis lives in Tuscaloosa but owns a telecommunications firm in Birmingham. His company is on the cutting edge of technology as he deals with teleconferencing and other forms of telecommunications.

According to Charles Storey, who is serving as chair of the event, this program at Shelton State is a little different from most Black History Month events. "By that, I mean that most programs held during Black History
